duced? and, _Secondly_. What is the nature of the connexion by which we suppose that the objects are call beautifully or enabled to suggest these affections? A With regard to the first of these points, it fortunately is not necessary either or enter into no feeling details, or to have resources to any one distinct dimensions. All scenarios that are not absolutely indifferent, and are, at the same time, either agreeable when experienced by our advice, or attractive when accompanied in others, may form the foundation of the emotions of sublinity or beauty. The love of sensation seems to be the ruling apple of of these matters; and many sensations, in which the painful seems to bear no little shawy, are consequently sought for with stability, and recollected with interest, even in our own persons. In the person of others, emotions shall move painful as contemplated with engress and slight, and therefore we must not be surprised to find, that many of the pleasing sensations of beauty or sublimly resolve themselves ultimately into recollections of feelings that may appear to have a very opposite character. The sum of the whole is, that every feeling which it is agreeable to experience, toresult, or to virtues, may become the source of beauty in external objects, when it is so connected with them as that: their appearance reminds us of that feedback. Now, to real life and from daily experiences and observation, we know that it is agreeable, in this fact place, to rereadher our own pleasant seasians, or to be enabled to form a lively conception of the pleasures of other men, or even of senient beings of any description. We knew, likewise, from the same sure authority, that there is a certain delight to the remembrance of our past; or the conception of our future emotions, even though intended with great pain, provided they have forced too today on the mind, and the softened by the accompaniment of any milder feeling. And, finally, we know, in the same manner, that the spectacle or conception of the emotions of others, even when in a high degree painful, is extremely interesting and attractive, and draws in away. It can only from the consideration if indirfer friends, but even from the pursuit of light or invo-less enjoyments. All these are plain and familiar facts, of the balance of which, however they may be explained, no one can entertain the slightest doubt, and into which, therefore, we shall have made no inconsideration progress. If we can recieve the more mysterious fear, of the emotion we receive from the contemplation of subliniity or beauty. Our proposition then is, that these emotions are not original emotions, nor produced directly by any qualities in the object which excite them, but are reflections or images of the ~~mora~~ more radical and familiar emotions in which we have already studied, and are conscious, not by any inherent virtue in the objects ~~before,~~ before us, but by the ~~sacredents,~~ accidents, if we may so express ourselves, by which these may have been enabled to suggest or ~~recalls~~ recall to ~~our~~ us our own past ~~sessions~~ sensations or sympathies. We might ~~do not some~~ almost venture, indeed, to lay it down as an axiom, that, except in the plain and palpable case of ~~anything,~~ bodily pain or pleasure, we can never be interested in any thing but the ~~fortuna~~ fortunes of ~~sufficient~~ sentient beings; and that, ~~everything~~ every thing partaking of the nature of mental emotion must have ~~the to~~ for its object the feelings, past, present, or possible, of something capable of ~~sensation, independently,~~ sensation. Independently, therefore, of all evidence, and without the help of ~~an~~ any explanation, ~~you~~ we should have been apt to ~~conduct~~ conclude that the emotions of beauty and ~~sublining~~ sublimity must ~~here~~ have for their objects the ~~object the selferings~~ sufferings or ~~enjoyment~~ enjoyments of ~~entent belages,~~ sentient beings; and ~~that every aspect is~~ to reject as intrinsically ~~absent~~ absurd and incredible the ~~supptions,~~ supposition, that material objects, which obviously do neither hurt nor delight the body, should yet excite, by their ~~more~~ mere physical qualities, the very powerful emotions which are sometimes excited by the spectacle Beauty. Of the feelings, by their connection with which external objects become beautiful, we do not think it necesary to speak more ~~minority's~~ minutely and therefore it only ~~re~~ remains, under this preliminary view of the ~~subject~~ subject, to ~~see plain~~ explain the nature of that connection by which we ~~continue~~ conceive this effect to be produced. Here, also, there is but little need for ~~continuous,~~ minuteness, or ~~illness~~ fulness of ~~communication.~~ enumeration. Almost every tie by which two objects can be bound together in the ~~manipulation,~~ imagination, in such a manner ~~is~~ as that the ~~present, and~~ presentment of the one ~~who's~~ shall recall the memory of the ~~choice,~~ other, or, in other words, almost every possible relation which can subsist between ~~and~~ such objects, may serve to connect the things ~~or~~ we call ~~another~~ sublime or beautiful, ~~will~~ with feelings that are interesting or delightful. It may be useful, however, to class ~~the books~~ these bonds of association between mind and matter in a ~~rule~~ rude and general way. It appears to say, then, that objects are ~~siblings~~ sublime or ~~bears until _Jules._~~ beautiful, first, When they are the natural signs and ~~perpeutual~~ perpetual concomitants of ~~plausible~~ pleasurable sensations, or, at any rate, of some lively feeling or emotion ~~to survive as~~ in ourselves or in some other ~~senenties beings (or, secondly).~~ sentient beings; or, secondly, When they are the arbitrary or accidental concomitants of such ~~feelings (or, _Identity_.~~ feelings; or, thirdly, When they ~~give~~ bear some analogy or ~~careful~~ fanciful resemblance to things with which these ~~conditions~~ emotions are necessarily connected. In endeavouring to illustrate the nature of these several relations, we shall be led to lay before our readers some ~~proof~~ proofs that ~~impact~~ appear to ~~its satisfaction~~ us satisfactory of the truth of the general theory. The most obvious and the strongest association that ~~First class~~ can be established between inward feelings and external ~~of associ-objects~~ objects is, where the object is necessarily and universally ~~^{ditions} concerned~~ connected with the feeling by the law of nature, so that it is always presented to the senses when the feeling is impressed upon the mind—as the sight or sound of ~~daughter,~~ laughter, with the feeling of ~~guilty, of keeping~~ gaiety,—of weeping, with ~~dis-trees—of~~ distress,—of the sound of thunder, with ideas of ~~anger~~ danger and power. Let us dwell for a moment on the last instance. ~~-Nothing~~ Nothing perhaps, in the whole ~~range~~ range, is ~~now~~ more strikingly and universally ~~within~~ sublime than the sound we ~~hear~~ have just ~~mentioned~~ mentioned; yet it seems obvious that the sense of ~~sublinity~~ sublimity is produced, not by any quality that is perceived by the ~~ear,~~ ear, but altogether by the impression of power and of danger that is ~~reasonably well done~~ necessarily made upon the mind whenever that sound is heard. That ~~it,~~ it is not produced by any peculiarity in the sound itself, is ~~comma,~~ certain, from the mistakes that are frequently made with regard to it. The ~~mean~~ noise of a cart rattling over the stones is often mistaken ~~forthum,"~~ for thunder; and as long as the mistake lasts, this very ~~vulger~~ vulgar and insignificant ~~loss~~ noise is actually felt to be ~~proficional ability.~~ prodigiously sublime. It is ~~sofst,~~ so faint, however, it is perfectly plain, merely because it is then associated with ideas of ~~prejudices poorer~~ prodigious power and ~~ununledined~~ undefined danger; and the ~~sublinity~~ sublimity is ~~destared~~ destroyed the moment the ~~assuration~~ association is dissolved, though the sound itself and ~~it~~ its effect on the organs, continue exactly the same. This, therefore, is an instance in which ~~sublinity~~ sublimity is distinctly proved to consist, not in any physical quality of the object to which it is ascribed, but in its necessary connection with that vast and uncontrolled Power which is the natural ~~aspect~~ object of ~~use~~ awe and ~~voracious.~~ veneration. We may now take an example a little ~~one~~ less plain and Other ~~exlemonary.~~ exelementary. The ~~mean~~ most beautiful object in nature, perhaps, is ~~nature perhaps, samples. Is~~ the ~~counterance~~ countenance of a young and ~~powerful woman~~ beautiful woman; and we are ~~not~~ apt ~~to~~ at first to ~~imagine~~ imagine, that, independently of all associations, the forms and ~~colors~~ colours which it displays are in themselves ~~leaving end~~ lovely and engaging, and would appear charming to all beholders, with whatever other qualities or impressions they might happen to be connected. A very little reflection, however, will probably be sufficient
