Such meanings of mind, fact profission of our own power, proceeds from too great admiration of others. Admiration has generally a degree of two very bad in-gedcters in its: if ignorance, and or fears, and does mifcher in compoffion, and in fic. Proof as the world is, there is more foperiously in it given, than af-funds: and its grandes of all kinds owe more of their elviation to the litlands of others minds, than to the greatest of their own. We no podficate spirit their voluntary pedefells, the figure they make among mankind would now find a high. _Infinityer and transfi-_ are forehead what the pedefull kind, and sometimes rather raife their _original's reputation_ by flowing him to be by them immobile, than their own. Homer has been tradition into mid languages: Allan tells this, that the Indians, (hopeful tutors!) have taught him to speak their tongue. When expect we from them? Not Ho-mer's Achilles, but formething, which, like Parrocius, affumes his name, and, at its peril, appears in the dead nor expedite women's Ulyfles gloriously betting out of his cloud too royal grandeir, but an Ulyfles under dis-guir, and a begant to our left. Such is that immurable father of poetry, and oracle of all the wife, whom Lycusgis transformed, and for an annual public record of wife works Solon enacted a law, that it is much to be feared, that his fo numerous translations are but as the published tellimomials of fo many nations, and ages, that this author to divine is untraflated fill. ~~—Gristhus nurem_ —Ville -_ Vare.~~ Nyte, Cynthius aurem Vellit,— ——— VIRG. and demands justice for his favourite, and ours. I don willke the doubtlets, divine har-many of three great names (how jully joined) of _Wilton, Greece,_ and _Rome?_ His verfe, but for his little feck of mortality, in its extreme parts, as his hero had in his heel; like him, had been insulterable, and imorotal.
